Now you can explore and run machine learning code in a Google Colab Notebook. In this lesson, you will learn how to use Python's SciPy module to run machine learning code. Kaggle Notebooks The code is open source: In this tutorial, we'll go over how to leverage the open source Scikit-learn library, which is a Python module for data mining. To start, you'll need to: 1. Know how to download and open a colab notebook. 2. Know how to install a module with pip in a colab notebook. 3. Know how to use the Jupyter Notebook from the Kaggle homepage. 4. Know how to specify data sources in the colab notebook. 5. Know how to print and store your data in Google Cloud Storage. Once you've run the notebook, you'll end up with a library of code that runs an example machine learning algorithm (XGBoost) using the raw data that you scraped from the Wikipedia Articles dump. Here's what a typical cell looks like: Notebook code cell 1 - There's a bunch of packages that you might want to get or install to run machine learning code. As always, be sure to check the documentation for each package before installing it. You can find all the packages and documentation for machine learning in Python in the Machine Learning Developer Guide. Since most of the packages are too big to install in a Google Colab Notebook, we'll use pip to install only the packages we need. pip install -U scikit-learn How to use the Jupyter Notebook The Colab Notebook is just a web browser; it's what you run on a browser. It's where you write and run your Python code. It's also where you get data to run your code on. From the Kaggle homepage, click on the J 82157476af
